

5 Ways to Ruin Your Career

If you've had six different jobs in the last 18 months and the only thing that is the same at each job is you, there may be a problem.

If you are some of the following may be some great information gathering techniques.

1. Most operations don't want a yes man. But, if you don't understand the organization in which you work, means you are not suitable for that workplace.
2. Make it all about the money.
3. Engage in endless chitchat and group talks. The boss will definitely notice all your time off task.
4. Blow off deadlines. You are part of a larger operation. When you drop the ball the whole team loses yardage.

5. Vacation on the job. Busy in long personal calls. Spend lots of time in chat rooms. Work on your blog at the office. Any of these should get you on the short-timers list and quick.

You got the job because the boss thought you are suitable for the all the tasks at workplace. Be passionate and try your best to the job successful.
